I Once Was Blind

Welcome to the day that you opened your eyes So wide that it ne arly took your life away And you are finally seeing all the thi ngs That you have been missing Could it really be that you have been so blind Or just merely looking the other way Today the w orld comes into focus And the hardest truth that you have ever known Grabs you by the throat There never was a light at the en d of the tunnel The tunnel you have been trapped in all these y ears And one simple answer cuts down all of your questions And two and two suddenly makes five And it's a revelation that you can no longer hide from You are falling, sinking, drowning, bur ning in lies (There is nothing left for you to hold onto)

You've found the landmine with your foot And your world is abou t to flip upside down Falling lower than you've ever been You w ill have to fight to ever get up again It's uglier than it's ev er been This World But it's yours now and you finally know What you are up against It's up to you to take it This World You st ick out your tongue and taste the rain Because there will be no going home again This is the hollow point The truth that you'v e been searching for All these long years All the horror that y ou've uncovered With you now and forever more The bullet that t ears right through you Leaves you broken Scarred for life All t he lies that your teachers told you All the things your parents said Soaked through with gasoline Gun shots echo through your head This world will run right through you This world will run you through
