

I Can Make You Feel Young Again

Copeland

Take me now;
take me anywhere you're going.
Cause I can't stay here;
I won't make it long.
And this piece of my soul you're controlling,
in this time and this space where we belong, it's worsening.
It's breaking down,
as a reel of thread unwinding.
You're surfacing
just to take me down.
When I feel like I'm dead,
you're reviving me.
A billion stars and here we are,
the same bit of dirt holding our weight.
And before it drags us under,
I can make you feel young again.
I can make you feel nothing at all for the years
that lead you here.
Now all your tears that have fallen will never show.
I can make you feel young again.
Your breathing is quickening.
Take my lungs; I owe you.
Lost and cold now,
there's a place in my arms I can keep you.
A billion stars and here we are,
the same bit of dirt holding our weight.
And before it drags us under,
I can make you feel young again.
I can make you feel nothing at all for the years
that lead you here.
Now all your tears that have fallen will never show.
I can make you feel young again.
