Paradise

Darkest Hour

After midnight's glow and morning's gloom has settled in its se lf-inflicted sense of self-loathing waking up from the longest dream where we're all running away it's a sobering experience still sinking still spinning still hanging by a thread I've been thinking I'll stop wasting the days away and make lif e worth living controlling these demons and stopping sirens from screaming lapsing in and out of this great escape a love-hate relationship we're all stuck in our ways and as we drown everyday we revel in our self-indulgence and wonder why we feel so trapped, in our bodies in out rooms, in out cities, with our words, with our words still sinking still spinning still hanging by a thread

I've been thinking I'll stop wasting the days away and make lif e worth living controlling these demons and stopping sirens from screaming lapsing in and out of this great escape a love-hate relationship we're all stuck in our ways and as we drown everyday we revel in our self-indulgence and wonder why we feel so trapped, in our bodies in out rooms, in out cities, with our words still sinking still spinning still hanging by a thread start thinking, stop wasting, start make life worth living
