Darby's Castle

Kris Kristofferson

See the ruin on the hill Where the smoke is hanging still Like an echo of an age long forgotten. There's a story of a home Crushed beneath those blackened stones And a roof that fell before the beams were rotten. See, Saul Darby loved his wife And he laboured all his life To provide her with material possessions And he built for her a home Of the finest wood and stone And the building soon became his sole obsession.

Oh it took three hundred days For the timber to be raised And the silhouette was seen for miles around And the gables reached as high As the eagles in the sky But it only took one night to bring it down --When Darby's castle tumbled to the ground.

Though the shared a common bed There was precious little said In the moments that were set aside for sleeping. For his busy dreams were filled With the rooms he'd yet to build And he never heard young Helen Darby weeping. Then one night he heard a sound As he laid his pencil down And he traced it to her door and turned the handle, And the pale light of the moon, Through the windows of the room, Split the shadows where two bodies lay entangled.

Oh it took three hundred days For the timber to be raised And the silhouette was seen for miles around And the gables reached as high As the eagles in the sky But it only took one night to bring it down ---When Darby's castle tumbled to the ground.