Our Lady Of Pigalle

Madeleine Peyroux

Can I buy you something, can I stroke your hair, Can I hold your hand and take you somewhere? YouDre a young nobody, youDre a perfect soul, YouDre an empty altar that can make me whole. Can I take you somewhere, can I wipe your tears, Can I fill your pockets or befriend you here? YouDre the final offer for the men who call, My highest hiding place, our lady of Pigalle.

Will you be ascending in this midnight heat On a flying buttress with stony feet? In the revolutions we tear down your walls and then Redeem you, reclaim you, our lady of Pigalle.

Youlre a young nobody, IDm a passing glance In the mad injustice of eternal romance; Beloved, broken into and caressed, You will bridge the waters and ID11 give you rest. In the early hours when the streetlights fade, For my inquisition and my last crusade, YouD11 be savior, a reason for it all And ID11 be blessed and favored, our lady of Pigalle.

Will you be ascending in this midnight heat On a flying buttress with stony feet? In the revolutions we tear down your walls and then Redeem you, reclaim you, our Lady of Pigalle.

Up to the places of your heart where souls wrestle angels in th e dark Ten thousand years the scent of life bottled up in you child, YouDre driving men wild!

Can I buy you something, can I wash your feet, Can I read you poems of my thirsty retreat? IDm a young nobody, IDm a perfect soul, I can take you in, I can make you whole.

Will you be ascending in this midnight heat On a flying buttress with stony feet? In the revolutions we tear down your walls, and then Redeem you, reclaim you, our Lady of Pigalle.
