Here's another day, she waits and pulls herself away At just the right moment to save her face I watch the time go ticking down The water falling on the ground

I catch myself and try to speak with grace You needed just enough anger, to get you through the door And you got just enough honesty To make you want a little more

I wish for nothing but the rain, to fall and wash away Everything that I've done wrong Find a way to make you strong If only for another day

When I'm all alone, just me and my ghosts Standing three deep, just like sentries at their post They make sure I remember, just a little more than most They make sure that I understand the consequence of past

You needed just enough anger To get you through the door And you got just enough honesty To make you want a little more

So it goes, I wish for nothing but the rain To fall and wash away
Everything that I've done wrong
Find a way to make you strong
If only for another day

When you see me chasing daydreams
And you know that I'm not there
I'm not the one who sits across from you
Who, returns your stare

And I watch as you grow quiet like you always did And I wait to get what I deserve It's the part that doesn't die that makes it hurt

Here's another day, she waits and pulls herself away
At just the right moment to save her face
I watch the time go ticking down, the water falling on the ground
I catch myself and try to speak with grace

So it goes, I wish for nothing but the rain To fall and wash away
Everything that I've done wrong
Find a way to make you strong
If only for another day

I wish for nothing but the rain To fall and wash away Everything that I've done wrong Find a way to make you strong If only for another day If only for another day
