The Coral

The room is warm
Thread on a table
The old lady sleeps in a chair

The lamp is dim

Lace ties the curtains

The scissors dangle from a hatch

The tea's gone cold
In her china cup
The cat's curled up by the fire

Behind the door A persistent sleep She keeps a lifetime locked away

Her mother's voice
That goes through the past
She cuts the roses to the ground

A book is closed Her mouth slightly open The floorboards creak in the hall
