Hallucinations

Tim Buckley

I saw you walking Only yesterday When I ran to catch you You disappeared And the street was gray

The candle died Now you are gone For the flame was too bright Now you are gone

I heard you laughing With your laugh of gold When I called out to you Silence returned And the air was cold

The castle fell Now you are gone

No more rings the bell Now you are gone I found a letter On the day it rained When I tore it open There in my hands Only ash remained

The castle fell Now you are gone No more rings the bell Now you are gone

I felt you breathing As I fell asleep When I reached out to touch you No one was there And the night was deep

The candle died Now you are gone For the flame was too bright Now you are gone

I saw you walking Only yesterday When I ran to catch you You disappeared And the street was gray

The castle fell Now you are gone No more rings the bell Now you are gone