

Without Regret

Akissforjersey

In the center of a city,
fear the flames that billow out of the windows and the doors,
The water's cold, and we could never make it on our own,
Turn around and back down, you always said enough for both of us.

But when it comes down to it; girl you know how I do it.

I'll feel better; I'll feel better without you.
I'll feel better; I'll feel better without you.

"So I'd die for you," He said without regrets,
"I wear this facade, just like the cloak around my neck."
"So I'd die for you," He said without regrets,
"I wear this facade, just like the cloak around my neck."
"So I'd die for you," He said without regrets; "So I'd die for you."

In the center of a city,
fear the flames that billow out of the windows and the doors,
The water's cold, and we could never make it on our own,
Turn around and back down, you always said enough for both of us.

But when it comes down to it; girl you know how I do it.

Save yourself, why can't you?
Save yourself, why?

(Oh, it's so beautiful, how we can save ourselves)
Save something that's of worth,
Oh pretty baby, it's a little unreliable.
But you're so predictable.

In the center of the city,
fear the flames that billow out of the windows and the doors, the water's cold...

Could you save enough for us to part, now with you?
Save enough for us to part, and you know,
Could you save enough for us to part, now with you?
Would you save enough!?