Yellow Rose

Alannah Myles

Hopelessly watching and waiting To see if my lover has turned to walk away Opening slowly I sit by the water, I'm broken There's nothing left to say

Red, red roses, all but one yellow bud The gentle thud of unrequited love

Am I protected by this thorn in my heart? What must I have been thinking of? The rose of recognition Or the yellow rose of unrequited love

Here in the aftermath, hopes crashed asunder I wonder, can I camouflage my sadness? Begging forgiveness, I don't understand love How could I not notice my madness?

Red, red roses, all but one yellow bud The yellow rose of unrequited love

Am I protected by this thorn in my heart? What must I have been thinking of? The rose of recognition Or the yellow rose of unrequited love

Holding my head up to fight off their glances I shifted and picked up my coat and my glasses Boldly I stood up to everyone's weakness I've lifted my spirits but still I am sleepless

Am I protected by this thorn in my heart? What must I have been thinking of? The rose of recognition Or the yellow rose of unrequited love What must I have been thinking of?
