Mirages

Andromeda

I could have pushed you out that day That would have been the easy way Watch you fly down that hundred meter fall I wouldn't care at all

Falling, falling, drowning Inhaling and you're screaming Screaming Pleading don't go

Mirages, as I hurt you in my mind As the memories unwind Mirages, as you led me to believe In things that only you conceive

Why do you play that vicious game I ask myself most every day So high, that hundred meter fall I turn around and there you are

Falling, falling, drowning Inhaling and I'm screaming Screaming Pleading Bleeding

Victoria falls were much too real It's beauty false though now I see Please try to explain What was the aim, what was the gain No matter how I try to wash it off The stains remain

(We are gathered here today To say our last farewells We fell so hard down that hundred meter fall Now, only stains of us remain)

Mirages, as you twisted with my mind As you told me I was blind Mirages, well constructed to deceive The trusty and naive Mirages, as you offered no reprieve From the hell you had achieved Mirages, as I finally could see That there was nothing to conceive