

Learning To Forget

Antifreeze

Four days short of five years
Im sitting in my bedroom Letting out our tears Holding back my love from you for months I hope you never know the damage that it does

I don't blame you at all for love gone wrong
I should've had the heart to tell you What you mean to me

I'm trying to replace memories I can't erase I'm making the most of time I spend with you I'm learning to forget all the I spent Looking for someone to replace you

Six months late,
On christmas day Confessed my love that never never went away Holding you on that night reminded me of what was right And made me the happiest I've been since this last July

There is no one to replace you