613 Shades of Sad

Asaf Avidan

What I say when I say that I miss you Is that I will always love me more What I need when I bleed just to drown you Is that someday you'll become a shore

It's my wave that will crave and will pull you And another that will push you back We will be just a sea they can sail through They can split us but we never crack

On occasions our sea will swallow 613 shades of sad And occasionally we'll be just shallow Enough for them to see the things we had 20,000 different leagues of sorrow They will surface but we'll let them drown And the moon will lift our holy bodies And we'll live as one

With the rate and the weight that I pound you You will tell me that you understand Every shell I'll propel just to spite you You will break it and you'll turn to sand

We will be just a sea and a shoreline We won't need no words, we'll have the tide I will bleed and I'll plead that I miss you Even though you'll never leave my side
