Bigotry Man (Who Are You)

Barren Cross

You're lucky you were born You might not have been All people in this world Have a right to live Your bigotry is hell for The other man Who's color of skin by the way you just might have been

The racist rambles on To tell what good he's done His pride and arrogance Has made him smaller And so the bigot falls Hippocracy's black walls Cave in on his unworthy head

Who, who are you Are, bigotry man You, you think you are better than them Your not

Men who are not like you are of lower form Men who don't look like you should of not been born The selfish man that hates knows not what is love Eventually he'll live all the things he's said and done

Who, who are you Are, bigotry man You, you think you are better than them Your not

The racist rambles on To tell what good he's done His pride and arrogance Has made him smaller And so the bigot falls Hippocracy's black walls Cave in on his unworthy head

Who, who are you Are, bigotry man You, you think you are better than them Your not
