

For every encaged hope there is a reason to struggle. And it doesn't take much courage to just say "no". I see no justice in considering the profit over the tons of murders. A cage is a cage and the bankers won't be the ones who scream. Their conscience, our reason, you need to abandon this shit. Day by day we keep on tearing down our cages. So what is fair into collaborating to theirs? For every encaged hope there is a reason to struggle. For every damaged heart there is a reason to fight. For every enclosed life there is a reason to struggle. And it doesn't take much courage to just say no!
