

The Doorkeeper

Black Tape for a Blue Girl

He learned to identify with the fleas in the doorkeeper's collar

He learned all their names, he learned what each could do

He appealed to their sense of vanity with kindly words and gifts

And sometimes thoughts of love, and sometimes he thought it helped

But none of it really helped, none of his gifts or words changed a thing

They always saw right through him