

Walking Into Walls

Brian McFadden

She wipes the tear from her brow
She's been cryin again
She's been walking into walls again
Behind her quivering smile, there's a secret
That goes deeper than the cuts she hides

Her head's spinning around
He bet her soul to the ground
A grown woman in pain
And all she longs to be, is that little girl, again

She screams inside, and all she wants to be
All she wants to be, is yesterday's child
She wants to hide, she can't run away
To the safety of yesterday's child

Curled up shivering alone, she's been hurt again
She's been walking into walls again
Her children keep her alive
They're her sanity, but they're the reason why she has to stay
A grown woman in pain and all she longs to be is that little girl, again