

A Scale, a Mirror and Those Indifferent Clocks

Bright Eyes

Here is a scale, weigh it out and you will find Easily, more than sufficient doubt that These colors you see were picked in advance
By some careful hand with an absolute concept of beauty

They are smeared and these blurs come in random order
And they color the eyes of your former lovers Hers were green like July except when she cried they were red
Now, I know a disease that these doctors can't treat

You contract on the day, you accept all you see is a mirror
And a mirror is all it can be, a reflection of something we're missing
And language just happened, it was never planned
And it's inadequate to describe where I am in the room of my ho use
Where the light has never been waiting for this day to end

And these clocks keep unwinding and completely ignore Everything that we hate or adore, once the page of a calendar i s turned It's no more, so tell me then, what was it for? Oh tell me, wha t was it for?
