You've been invited to remember the alumni You check the calendar, electing to go Let's buy a tie just to honor this reunion I'll show the side of me I want them to know When they say, "Where have you been since the last graduation? How have you changed the world you are in? Is life a party or a sad revelation? What do you do with the time of your life?" You find it hard to aviod interrogation You clear your throat to tell them a lie Why should I deal with this corss-examination? What does it matter what I do till I die? Still it haunts you... "Where have you been since the last graduation? How have you changed the world you are in? Is life a party or a sad revelation? What do you do with the time in your life?" What have you done with your life? They voted you "most likely to succeed in" You were headed straight to the top Where did the time go, what were the reasons? When does this questioning stop? What have you done with your life? What have you done with your life? Now you're invited to a final invocation There'll be a time you're elected to go You won't be able to cancel this appointment You aren't at liberty to say yes or no And you'll hear, "Welcome tonight to the last graduation How have you changed the world you were in? My only Son is the hope of your salvation What did you do with Him In your life?" And you'll hear, "Welcome tonight to the last graduation How have you changed the world you were in? My only Son is the hope of your salvation What did you do with Him In your life?" What have you done with your life? Welcome tonight

To the last gradu
