

Lead Me To The Water

Bryan Duncan

Between the divide, there is a river.
The water is clear and pure as driven snow.
It flows from a spring that wells forever,
Enriching the world beneath God Almighty's throne.
And though the masses won't believe it,
If it's there it's not too far to go.
Lead me to the water that can wash my heart clean,
Replenish my spirit.
Lead me to the water, the crystalline water,
And let me start over.
In the springs of living water, let each new day begin.
They're standing their ground out in the desert.
Wasting away, but not thirsty anymore.
You're taking a chance against the current;
Old habits will stand and they'll curse you from the shore.
But I'm sure I wanna chance it,
And the time has come, so let me go.
Lead me to the water that can wash my heart clean,
Replenish my spirit.
Lead me to the water, the crystalline water,
And let me start over.
In the springs of living water, let each new day begin.
In the springs of living water, let each new day begin.
Aaaahhh!
Lead me to the water, wash my heart clean,
Replenish my spirit.
Lead me to the water, crystalline water,
And let me start over.
In the springs of living water, let each new day begin.
In the springs of living water, let each new day begin.
In the springs of living water, let each new day begin.
