Don't You Think Someone Should Take You Home

Butch Walker

Her hair is like a crow's nest
She's got glitter in her eye
Her smile is like a jack-o-lantern
Trying not to cry
She's been living been living pretty hard
Since her old man up and died a year ago

And I see her every morning
While she's walking to the check
She holds her head like she's got something heavy
Hanging 'round her neck

Puts some money in her purse
And hides some where he won't expect before she goes

Don't You Think Someone Should Take You Home Don't You Think Someone Should Take You Home

Well she stole more than a little From her folks in Cartersville With that wrong foot in that right boot Left a lot of room to fill

With one foot on the platform And a lot of time to kill They shoulda' known

Don't You Think Someone Should Take You Home Don't You Think Someone Should Take You Home

Well I haven't seen her lately Guess I just assumed the worst But I think I kinda miss her Standing there with her lips pursed.

First thing in the morning Leaning up against the church Like it's your own

Don't You Think Someone Should Take You Home Don't You Think Someone Should Take You Home Don't You Think Someone Should Take You Home