

Dad

Camouflage

You're getting older than ever before. And apple-pie order exists no more

But he's sending you to school following a common rule

Frightened by implications, followed by indication

Voices whisper inside your head, no one will believe, 'cause he's your dad, he's your dad

And at night, he came and tried to take your light

And at night, he came and tried to take your light

You were not even fourteen You were not even fourteen

Weeping lonesome, there's no one to tell, that he came and broke the shell

Bodies land covered with lava, makes you feel like a cadavre

Wish to touch the sky only once before you die

Voices whisper inside your head, no one will believe, 'cause he's your
dad, he's your dad

And at night, he came and tried to take your light

And at night, he came and tried to take your light

You were not even fourteen - You were not even fourteen

And at night, he came and tried to take your light

And at night, he came and tried to take your light

You were not even fourteen - You were not even fourteen

You were not even fourteen - You were not even fourteen - You were not even fourteen
