After The War

Chinchilla

When the night raises the power all over the earth The coldest atmosphere, the whole world invaded This would be the last time and the last place Where (the) human kind lost their big holy war

The acid rain is falling from the darkened and hidden sky The second ice age was declared after their war There are only a hand full of humans surviving The last creatures which never rule on these earth

After the War After the War, there would be no chance After the War After the War, the call of nature returns After the War After the War, the time stands still forever After the War After the War, the call of nature returns

But all was a vain, they disregarded all the warnings Eager (as) they glorify their silver and gold Long before their time has come, prophets foretold them Their fate of what they've read in the book of prophecies

Blinded by greed they polluted their living space And one day they let call their nuclear force In a few seconds they destroyed all what the nature has made Returning to the point where they started before

After the War After the War, there would be no chance After the War After the War, the call of nature returns After the War After the War, the time stands still forever After the War After the War, the call of nature returns