Home

Chris Murray

I've raised the dust on ten thousand streets worshipped the earth with the soles of my feet I've roamed around all the days of my life headed for someone, somewhere to arrive

I want to go home, but home has gone away young head foolish, young heart unwise I left my home for the world outside much too late I realized my home was always in your eyes

I'm here one minute then the next I'm gone when I get that feeling then I'm moving on don't feel much like hangin' around cos what I'm looking for, I ain't found country lanes and city lights they smell so sweet and they shine so bright there's so much in this world to see and every place is calling me, but
