The Difference In Me

Within these empty walls I've been talking to myself again You don't hear a word But bother to explain it when

You say that I should try But I feel I'm half alive The rest of me is somewhere else

I wish the world would just spin faster You told my happy ever after You're looking at me You're waiting to see The difference, the difference in me You keep telling me to grow up Why should I it's never good enough How could I be when you never See the difference The difference in me

I don't wanna fight Don't care whose right or wrong anymore I'm sick of all this pain Can it be the way it was before

When I always made you smile Seems it's been awhile But now you're always out of reach

I wish the world would just spin faster You told my happy ever after You're looking at me You're waiting to see The difference, the difference in me You keep telling me to grow up Why should I it's never good enough How could I be when you never See the difference The difference in me The difference, the difference in me

You say that I should try But I feel that I'm half alive And the rest of me is somewhere else

I wish the world would just spin faster Get to my happy ever after You're looking at me You're waiting to see The difference, the difference in me You keep telling me to grow up But why should I it's never good enough How could I be when you never See the difference The difference in me

I changed my hair

Clique Girlz

And I threw out my clothes (Threw out my clothes) You say you see but you Don't even know See the difference, the difference The difference, the difference in me

I'm not the same as I was before
(Same as before)
I'm not afraid to walk right out that door
See the difference, the difference in me