You closed your eyes, slept longer. You're the one that I needed all along, but I can't feel you no And in the corner of my heart I still hold you close, prop your head up and pull you to your toes when you feel you'v e fallen down, but I can't feel you now. We'd run through the tall grass, ever stumbling, and never could have known it wouldn't be this way. But rest here now, I can't go on when all our foolish words are falling in the way. As time is drifting by, it's all too much to fight through all our tears. I wake alone, and I come undone, 'cause I can almost feel your waking eyes searching for mine, fighting all your tears. Now I feel you like sunlight. Now I feel you, but it burns and I never sleep 'cause I can't see into your night. And now that I see you, I can't close my eyes. And if my voice happens to fall on your ears, I don't know what would happen here. If this song falls on your ears, I don't know what would happen here.

I kissed you on a lavender hillside in the sun.