Debris

Counterparts

Everything ends At least that's what we hope for Plagued by our past And we're doomed to repeat ourselves

Afraid of the thoughts that dance in revolutions And circle the mind like a snake Binding me I'm just trying to feel something

Cold and stale Searching for warmth inside of every promise wasted You wrap yourself around me But I can only sense your presence You're nothing but a carcass

I've never felt more alone than I did on those nights I spent watching you sleep You're the furthest thing from me And you've been there from the start

An empty shell You're vacant and it scares me to death One by one I watched them leave me behind like living debris Fortunately, I know that I'm not worth it In my purest form, I was never good enough for anyone Why did I think that this time it'd be different?

I came bearing only the beat of my heart And the best of my intentions

I tried my hardest but I couldn't make you feel a fucking thing
