

After midnight's glow and morning's gloom has settled in its self-inflicted sense of self-loathing waking up from the longest dream where we're all running away it's a sobering experience still sinking still spinning still hanging by a thread I've been thinking I'll stop wasting the days away and make life worth living controlling these demons and stopping sirens from screaming lapsing in and out of this great escape a love-hate relationship we're all stuck in our ways and as we drown everyday we revel in our self-indulgence and wonder why we feel so trapped, in our bodies in out rooms, in out cities, with our words, with our words

still sinking still spinning still hanging by a thread
I've been thinking I'll stop wasting the days away and make life worth living

controlling these demons and stopping sirens from screaming
lapsing in and out of this great escape
a love-hate relationship
we're all stuck in our ways
and as we drown everyday we revel in our self-indulgence
and wonder why we feel so trapped, in our bodies in out rooms, in out cities, with our words still sinking still spinning still hanging by a thread start thinking, stop wasting, start make life worth living