

Comfort

Deb Talan

When everyone has gone to sleep and you are wide awake there's no one left to tell your troubles to.
Just an hour ago, you listened to their voices lilting like a river over underground and the light from downstairs came up soft like daybreak
dimly as the heartache of a lonely child.

If you can't remember a better time you can have mine, little one.
In days to come when your heart feels undone
may you always find an open hand and take comfort wherever you can.

And oh, it's a strange place.
And oh, everyone with a different face but just like you thought when you stopped here to linger
we're only as separate as your little fingers.

So cry, why not? we all do then turn to one you love and smile a smile that lights up all the room.
Follow your dreams in through every out-door it seems that's what we're here for.

And when you can't remember a better time
you can have mine, little one.
In days to come when your heart feels undone
may you always find an open hand and take comfort, there is comfort.
Take comfort wherever you can, you can, you can.