Hymn

Duncan Sheik

All the storms and oceans
All the sheltering sky
All this earth and she and I

Wait, until it happens
Wait, the moment will come
Wait, but all those are already one

And she asks me, how many sunrises Will we watch from start to finish How many will we witness?

And my answers are only ever surmises
Maybe a handful of times
Before the next life, before the next life

Here, we stop beneath the leaves Here, a moment to stay Here, a gift of pale green color, here above her

And she asks me, how many sunrises Will we watch from start to finish How many will we witness?

And my answers are only ever surmises Maybe a handful of times Before the next life

A kiss, a prayer, a laugh, a song
She won't try to tell me, what's right from wrong
A song, a laugh, a prayer, a kiss
She won't try to tell me, I need more than this

All my answers, all my surmises Will never do it justice
She'll just have to trust it

Wait here, 'til the sun rises Watch from start to finish No one as our witness With no one as our witness
