As Low As You Can Go

Earl Thomas Conley

I came home early this morning and she was gone So I turned to the mirror but the mirror seemed to say

Down in the valley
Across the city
Through the dark alleys
Filled with self-pity
Where people are victims of their own fears

Have you come down to the devil's table Drinking poison, 'til you're not able To see how your laughter has turned to tears

Boy you're as low as you can go
Among the seeds that you have sown
There lies a man you should have known

Boy you're as low as you can go
Among the seeds that you have sown
There lies a man you should have known

Boy you're as low as you can go Left more than tracks along the road Among the seeds that you have sown There lies a man you should have known
