A Staggering Moon

Amidst the streams of the river The flow Was achanging And autumn rain unfolded its charm

With the thorns of absence So sweet to your skin In the dusty veils of morning You had forgiven all bearing

The land blessed the manifold Faces of your love The garden Lies asleep The grave unclouded And we dance about a fallen sun

Night-moths on her wings... A staggering moon Elend