Today

It's six o'clock still in bed to my dismay people are hurrying though the town they work all the day saving their pay to bay themselves into a better life I stagger out of bed and wash my aching head trough my window shines the sun-light brigth and clean look on people's head looks like pearls in river beds and then laugh about their little world