Passing On The Stairs

In the hall lights flicker hum With her buckles still undone She hides beneath her blue trench coat Gaze so soft, yet so remote In that dusty uniform The outline of her lovely form And more than once I've brushed her hand Passing on the stairs

In the hall lights flicker hum His dark lashes always hung With a look so weary and so wise When we passes he gently sighs In his work-worn boots he leans And I wonder what it means Whatever does it mean Passing on the stairs

Up the stairs every night Up the stairs seven flights And down she goes into the night Down my stairs and out of sight

Who is she with that misty look? Every night a different book With the scent of violets in her hair Who's this angel on my stairs?

A distant time comes back to me The wild reeds, the salty sea My father calling 'Don't go far' I gathered sea glass in a jar And built a castle with a moat The wind blew sand into my hair In the rustling of your over coat Passing on the stairs

Up the stairs every night Up the stairs seven flights And down she goes into the night Down my stairs and out of sight

And I wonder if she thinks of me Is it just a boyish fantasy? Speak dear lady won't you speak Can't you tell you make me meek? So in silence once more we pass Another night I walk on glass And I dream that she thinks of me Passing on the stairs

And I wonder if he thinks of me If this could be our destiny Oh haven't you a word for me If only you'd misplace your key So in silence once more we pass Another night I walk on glass

Elysian Fields

And how I dream he thinks of me And our passing on the stairs

Up the stairs every night Up he climbs seven flights And down she goes into the night Down my stairs and out of sight Up the stairs every night Up the stairs seven flights And down she goes into the night Down my stairs and out of sight
