The Spice of Life

Everything But the Girl

Something has come between me and the world that knew What I thought wild last is falling apart in the face of something new

How can I explain that I had no choice
The sound of the waves fills her ears and drowns out my voice
And I'm just too far away for her to believe what I say
She couldn't hear me, she wouldn't listen anyway

How can I write a letter the post is so slow If I'm to disappoint her then that's something she ought to kno $\ensuremath{\mathbf{w}}$

I can just hear her voice fall as I wait here alone How can so much harm be done by just two minutes spent on the p hone

You say that things will get better
But she would hate me if I let her
And she reads so much in every word that I say

I thought that being apart would lust bring us some variety But after some time it seems clear that she's changed in a diff erent way from me

And I would like to shout at someone but no one's to blame It's just her it's just me and everything that is just not the same

Sometimes I would turn back the clock
And recapture all that we've lost
But I couldn't give up all that we have today