A Walk On A Broken Road

It feels like yesterday When I was told a little tale About a broken road A tale of fortune and of fame

There was a time When a man couldn't find his kind There was a rhyme Which made a man make up his mind

In those lines I heard you say Fare well on your way There every root and stone and wishing well Has a tale to tell

The air that I breathe Is made of dreams and memories Of past and future days And countless new pathways

When I look behind I see my footprints on the road Those remind of the time When your haven always welcomed me

In those lines I heard you say Fare well on your way And when the broken road turns home again There's a tale to tell Excalion
