

Sorrow's End

Far

I used to think, "I've never been through it, the deaths and stuff that make us old enough."
Old enough to love a boy whose name
I still don't know. We traded voices, blurted accidents.
Brutal Winter froze through Spring's slow crawl.
In the Summer's burn,
the impending Fall.