Once upon a time when mythic creatures thrived

My land was pure, the forests primeval still

And pagan reels would stir the crooked boughs

Surrendering them to the whims of the whispering wind...

There flowers sprung beneath the cloven hoofs

Of an elder being-far more ancient than the Olympians themselves...

The ancient trees know him by the name-Pan, what lust runs through thy veins!

The Dryads alone yet sing his fame—Pan, thy music the Gods entertains!

Ten score Satyr squires

With nymphs sought delight...thy flute is divine

O Pan, our music inspire!

Teach us thine art

The tunes that would win

The hearts of a nymph!

The ancient trees know him by the name-Pan, what lust runs through thy veins!

The Dryads alone yet sing his fame—Pan, thy music the Gods entertains!

Pan, great god

Spread panic in our enemy's ranks!

We invoke thy name

In moonlit glades-grant us the gift

Of arcane prophecy...

The ancient trees know him by the name-Pan, what lust runs through thy veins!

The Dryads alone yet sing his fame—Pan, thy music the Gods entertains!

(Orphic hymn to Pan excerpt:)

"I invoke the brawny Pan, the sky and the sea-I invoke earth, the sovereign queen and immortal fire...

O friend of Echo, thou who dances with the nymphs, thou who kno west everything, bearer of light, the true horned Zeus..."

I can hear the rivers lamenting and the willows weep...

Pan, our forests doth miss you...

For now a loathsome Christ has dubbed you Satan

And cast thee in exile...

But your shrines are not forgotten—there are those who still ut ter thy name

To restore thy glory and behold thee, Horned god, enthroned once more!

"Thou who changes the nature of every thing with thy prediction s and guides the race of men upon this vast earth...

But come o blessed one, thou courtier of Bacchus, come o inciti ng one, come to our holiest of sacrifices and grant us a good l ife's ending by dispersing the frenzy of panic unto the four co rners of the earth..."
