

It's all small town hucksters and big city thieves trying
with all they can to take the rug from under our feet.
Broken down and beaten down, another day will surely rise.
What's the point in getting up?
We begin to finally realize with nothing left to hold onto we'r e left grasping at straws.
We're looking for someone to love us in spite of our flaws, so our hope hangs on a con man the kind that will steal our souls, promise them to the gods above and those down below.
So they conceptualize heaven in our eyes, we can see it there f loating in the air, blind with faith and hearts devoted.
We can finally see the light smiling through another week, shin ing in the darkness night but then the doubt comes creeping in.

Maybe they are also wrong, in the foundation comes a crack no l onger our belief so strong this isn't really news to us, we've known it all along.
For lack of any option better we'll continue to sing the song.
