This World

Funker Vogt

For centuries and centuries
I walked along their battlefields
Rotten flesh and burned soil
Is all what they have left

A strange desire for destruction Can be felt at all these places An awful waste of resources All for their killing machinery

A world all made of battlefields A world all drowned in blood A world which will not last forever Is all that we have got

A world all made of battlefields A world all built for wars And now we take the battlefields Far out to the stars

They get better year by year With a frightening efficiency Killing thousands in one strike By pushing just one button

So I have been everywhere From the jungle to the mountain And even in the deepest sea I saw the signs of a past war
