When I think of all I put you through Always taking you for granted I never saw it from your point of view Blinded by the double standard You were tryin' to tell me all along Something in the love was missing You said