Hurting And Shoving (She Should Have Let Me Sleep)

Glassjaw

When I get back, pre-break of dawn Hear the ring it's me, live from a pay phone Talking in the rain Things pan out exactly as I say they will

Will I be less happy when I get back? Two hand in one glove as if we were poor The hard up make the soup from stones Like the poor before them did before

You say the waiting could crush your heart But it's nothing new to me Have you crave me so desperately But I know how when you need me

You bleed for me though now I'm gone You fill my shoes with new fans Always and forever, we are apart and may she see She'd be free rejoicing in distance

If she only let me sleep
Will things make less happy when I get back?
Absence makes the heart grow still
Abuse the hunt, confuse the kill
I know, I know

Make the dead feel deader, deader
Make the dead sleep nights with a razor
Waiting, kill the prey
I'll hold my child's head underwater

If it's a boy, I was joking, if it's a daughter I'll say I did what I did because I had to

And if you find my kid later, tell her I laughed too We just might work out fine because I love you enough To let you give the pain that I want

And when you do, I just might fuck you enough to love you Once upon my night stand, lied letters piled in columns Postmarked Middle Island, out east in the country of Solemn
