A Place For Grief

Graham Coxon

Walls bleed, pictures bend their fractured frames Features on canvas torn Burning mirror breaking down to sand Free from jails of form

The black water future I see So hard to drain The small child in everyone is forced to bleed To live life again

The light ever closer we believe Is only a place for grief

Every life's so small We call it precious And every soul is so loved Above

Days glide through a skin of open pores Stretched on bended frames Years long on sanded banks around your shores Counting every grain

Words form poisoned worlds I never see So hard to hear Ring the bell of truth in every dream No life, no fear

Every night brings disasters to our rooms A lifetime inside you
