We were far from the shores of England Far from our children and wives To play our hand in the Newfoundland where the wind cuts like a knife we were far from the shores of England

We shipped on board the Maryanne to find a better life and we walked across the water when she broke up on the ice

We came ashore in Carbonear with nothing but our rights and I wondered if I e'er again would see my London Lights

We were far from the shores of England far from our children and wives to play our hand in the Newfoundland where the wind cuts like a knife we were far from the shores of England far from our native soil to chase a wish, and to hunt the fish, and on the rocks to toil we were far from the shores of England

We spend our days amid the waves working water, hook and twine we'd go for weeks with blistered cheeks waiting for the sun to shine but as long as the sky hold over us we will not taste the brine and we'll curse the cod with the fear of god as we haul in every line

Should we find fortune's favour, and be spared from the gale we will live off honest labour with our hearts as big as sails but if I should die don't bury me or leave me to the sea just send my bones back to my home where my spirit can be free
