Chapter IV - The Sleeping Child

Starlight twinkles mighty As they celebrate this night Distant clatter of the horses hooves Heralds their demise

"Bring oaken barrels, rise your horns Lay weapons all aside" A golden shimmer throws its trail Upon the tavern's light

Mors stupebit et natura Cum resurget creatura

At midnight's stroke When two moons rise And storm awakes The sleeping child

When two moons unite Silent tears will fall Once upon time Like a dream long ago

The sleeping child

Then a storyteller awakes the realm Of dragons, wizards, knights As mighty men and servants Are sitting round the fire side by side

No one knows the evil Out of the forest's deep Mother death is soon to sing Her melody so sweet

Mors stupebit et natura Cum resurget creatura

Under the cloak of darkness And within the dim haze As mighty and servants shed Their lifeblood on their blades

When two moons unite Silent tears will fall Once upon a time Like a dream long ago

At midnight's strike When two moons rise And storm awakes The sleeping child