

General Winter

Hail of Bullets

Scorched earth lies behind them
On schedule they are Accompanied by victory
They came from very far
Drunken of the lootings
Ares on their side
Guides them to disaster
About to turn the tide

Autumn at the Eastern Front
Still they do proceed Heavy rains are setting in
The attack is loosing speed

Her suburbs now in sight
The 3rd and 4h Panzerarmies
Vainly wait for their supplies
Plod on through the filth
On impassible roads
Hardly making progress
Streets turn in to floods

Winter at the Eastern Front
They do no longer proceed Heavy cold is setting in Forcing troops to raise the siege

Stumbling, wading through the blizzard rage
Advance halts, disappears in snow and ice
Iwan laughs,
Welcoming General Winter
White scourges,
natural mighty allies

Standing ground,
Sharpening frost, minus 40
Frozen oil, silences artillery
Swollen limbs, scorbutics, cracking army
Landsers cry, thousands die, catastrophy

Awaiting the turning point patiently
The Soviets launch their attack Trying to break through the German flanks
To encounter them at their backs
Siberians in winter uniform
And well-equipped for the fight Offensives unleashed from the North and the South To cut right through their supply lines

Finally the order
Preparing for retreat
The Wehrmacht has to withdraw
Or else will face defeat
Despite all the losses
The Red Army has failed
An impasse at the Eastern Front
And none have prevailed

Sixty miles from Moscow
In winter positions
Exhausted from the war
But the battle rages on
