

There Was A Time

Hocico

Deep in their wounds there's something strange bad signs of death foretelling the plague

While their strength drains out they lose their hope waiting for a cure and a blessing waiting to be saved

Their faith decays, internal struggle altered bloodstream in their veins
Their faith decays, internal struggle
fate's marked in their face

The rays of light are fading fast

The sun's turning black, seas are turning red this will be the end of an insane age forever they defied your power and force now they realize they're naked souls

There was a time to get the meaning of things There was a place to be just as we are There was a time to forget all our fears There was a place to forgive all injuries

Crawling they clamor for their souls to be restored to pursue the air as once they did.
