The Far Pavilions

Hopesfall

How could I endure one more sunrise in this cold and unfamiliar place Where friends pass by like autumn leaves, only to stay for a se ason My heart dead to the smallest act of compassion It gave them no reason to break the cycle of the passers by Their actions made trust a failed practice So here I stand on this hill alone, never turning back In hopes that the past will fade