

Julie, your make up has run streaks
Down your face from the tears.
Where is the comfort of the loved ones
You once held so dear?
Always the soul who the friend could confide in,
You listened with sorrow, you felt from within.
Never a word from that stone face, so silent
With chains wrapped around blocking light
From you blue eyes.

Julie, although you're alone in this world
There must be someone to run to,
And somewhere to hide
When the pain becomes too much to bear.

The past behind you has left scars
That still burn to the touch.
And I'm so sorry now Julie,
But I'd just like to help you so much.
Such strong emotions, it seems like your passions
Are hidden with sorrow and fear.
Julie, it will tear you apart that you see life,
So stripped down and lonely
So honestly clear.

What would it take,
To see you smile and dry your eyes.
I've seen your face before, and it's time,
You opened up, and realized.