The III-Starred Son

Insomnium

Her dirge still echoes in these woods Mourning lingers in the vales As the wind cries on the shore Her wailing can be heared

Mirthless is this wandering through Hollow days Like a pale ghost I waste away in This foul world

What sin do I atone for in this Dreadful way? Why the Gods sneer rat me as I Keep writhing in pain?

Where has my dearest gone to? Where sings now my maiden fair? Beneath the darksome waters Underneath the moonlit waves

Where is our ill-starred son?
Where lies our poor stillborn child?
Below the silent mound
In the arms of scared earth

She become weary of the world Tired of this marred life Burdened with sorrow far too deep A pain impossible to bear

There is no light at the end of this Blackened path
Calm again are the sullen waters
Before me

If Gods shall hearken to me Fate will be begin
I leave these woes behind
Depart from these cares

For we shall be reunited
On the other side
I descend to my love and caress her
Forevermore
